

IS A DEADLY DRUG

Powerful Opiate Popular With South African Natives.

Produces Exquisite Feeling of Supreme Content and Happiness, but Leaves Victim a Wreck.

It is not only among war-weary people in big cities that drug taking is prevalent.

The natives of South Africa cultivate—natives, because there is a huge fine if the authorities find them out—a herb called dagga.

Dagga in Africa is what opium is to China. It is smoked—but smoked in a strange way—and the native smokes it only in the very early dawn or very late at night, when he can do it secretly.

He scoops a hole out of the hard ground three to four inches deep by three inches wide. A foot or so away from this he scoops another hole, and he then bores a small channel underground from one to the other. There is thus a free air passage connecting the two little excavations.

He places some dried dagga leaves in the first hole, lights them and covers them over with moist clay. He pierces this clay with a sharpened piece of wood to allow a draught to go through.

Into the other hole he inserts a small hollow reed—this is the pipe stem—squeezes moist clay round it, and on his knees begins his smoke.

A cup of water is at his side, and after each "draw" he cleverly lets a mouthful of water in without letting any smoke escape. Then in some marvelous manner he ejects the water in a long thin stream and the smoke slowly follows.

Bending low over the reed and sitting back on his heels, this is repeated time and time again.

His eyes stream with tears and soon get very bloodshot and swollen. He becomes excited; he feels elated, buoyed up in some wonderful way. All his cares and troubles are forgotten, and in their place has come an exquisite feeling of supreme content and happiness.

He begins to talk, and the occupants of his kral hear great tales, tales of daring deeds of his youth—told with much demonstration and wild enthusiasm. Tales of his early fights—tales of battles and of victories—always of victories. Tales of great heroism—wonderful journeys—of old forests and young love.

But the influence of the dagga dies out. The native's eyes are screwed up small, his head aches, his limbs and face become inert, and in a short while he is just a huddled mass of heavy sleep.

His joy in life has lasted just about an hour, and in the dim dawn he awakens feeling a fearful "wreck." But he believes in "a hair of the dog that bit him," and so—another pipe before work.

Strange Moon Rays.

Pusilex, the distinguished selenographer of the Paris observatory, some time ago reached the conclusion that the curious rays or bands extending in straight lines away from many lunar craters, such as the celebrated Tycho, are produced by the deposition of volcanic ashes carried to great distances by the winds that happened to prevail when the eruption occurred.

He accounts for the relative narrowness of these bands, which are never more than thirty miles broad, although their length are sometimes many hundred miles, by supposing that only the central axis of the deposit has remained, the less dense borders having been destroyed by the denuding forces of the air when the moon had a considerable atmosphere.

Ruined by the Movies.

His pockets were empty, but it was evident he had seen better days. "Yes," he was saying to a sympathizer, "I was once the cynosure of all eyes; I was the tattooed man in a circus."

"And how did you lose your job?" he was asked.

"Public's gone crazy over moving pictures," he mournfully replied, "and mine won't budge."

Diplomacy.

"What did your boy Josh go when you told him he would have to go out in the world and make his own living?"

"He went to the next farm as a hired hand, and in a week had me offerin' him his board an' keep an' more wages."

Careful Shopper.

The Wife—"I'm becoming a regular business woman, my dear. I bought forty pairs of silk stockings reduced from 40 to 30 francs and with the 400 francs I saved I got myself that duck little hat I envied so much."—Paris Le Rite.

Absorbing Occupation.

"Can't you get me a government job?" asked the willing worker. "I'd like to," answered Senator Sorghum. "But a man in government employ has to work so hard nowadays that you wouldn't have time to be any help in my political campaigns."

Hidden Treasure.

Mrs. Ecks—"That's a shockingly clumsy maid who served us. And Mrs. Wise said she had such a treasure."

Mrs. Wye—"This maid is one she hired for the occasion. She has the treasure locked up in her room for fear one of the guests might steal her."

The Island of Guam.

The island of Guam, ceded to the United States by Spain in 1898, is 5,044 miles from San Francisco and 1,500 from Manila. It is 30 miles long and 100 around and has a population of 13,000.
